Text: «Let us assume that there is a substantial difference between lemon juice and chloroform. That was to be expected and – need it be said that? – there is significant differences, among other things, between think tank and myself. There's reason to believe that chloroform and lemon juice are as necessary as coma for extrasensory perception. In a manner of speaking; breathing a so called toxic substance, such as chloroform, could increase – by combination of circumstances – creative activities in order to gradually create new physical and intellectual abilities such as ubiquity and prophecy. Consequently: a thirst-quenching liquid like lemon juice and an anesthetic like chloroform are not only different products but also the prerequisite to metaphysical introitus.»
